Community-focused suicide prevention services

Everyone can play a role in suicide prevention. Our prevention services help build safer communities by giving people the skills to identify and respond to risk of suicide.

Wellbeing workshops

Our evidence-informed workshops deliver strategies for community wellbeing and resilience, including how to respond to stress, change and challenge.

Wellbeing group programs

The Optimal Health Program (OHP) is a more in-depth program that takes a holistic evidence-based approach to wellbeing. Groups are run over several weeks and provide people with the knowledge and skills to improve and maintain overall wellbeing.

Community & workforce capacity building

Our team facilitates training to support workplaces and community groups to recognise and respond to risk of suicide. Our training also enhances people's confidence to have conversations about mental health and suicide, and build an awareness of where to find help and how to link people to support.

Support after suicide

Our bereavement services provide support to anyone who has been bereaved by suicide at any stage of the grieving process.

Individual counselling & support

Our Psychologist and Allied Health workers provide non-judgemental and flexible one-on-one support. Sessions can be held in our offices, in the community/at the person's home, or over the phone.

Group support

Group support sessions are co-facilitated by our Psychologist, Allied Health staff and Peer Support staff who have a lived experience of the impact of suicide. The sessions provide a supportive environment to process grief and connect with others.

Community support response

These small group sessions provide a timely response after suicide to minimise distress and support those impacted by suicide to process their loss and develop resilience. We offer these sessions in settings such as workplaces, schools and clubs, and to family and friendship groups.

Care coordination

We provide referral support to help people bereaved by suicide to find and connect with the services they need to support their wellbeing.
